

Russell/Dilai and Moule/Lamph in the mixed K2.

Nottingham and Wey in the next two places, reflecting the number of people racing for them. Other clubs produced better average individual performances but not enough paddlers to count. Some people boosted their clubs' scores by racing in more than one age category. There were classes with only one entry so another paddler of the relevant age category could amble round for 49 points. Should competitors be applauded for attempting as many races as possible or should they be restricted to their own age bands? Should the results award 50 points for first place, declining by 1 point for each successive place behind, or should there be one point for last place, increasing by 1 point for each higher place, distinguishing between classes with large entries and those with only one or two? Should the points reflect the time

Roeser and Lamph winning the ladies' K2.
