occasional boat coming down the course alone to claim the national title, such as Gill/Reid in women's C2 200 and 500m, even without age grouping, Jones/Phillips the same over 500m and Palmer in women's C1 1km. Some masters age groups had no entries and others were merged.

One of the most intriguing races was the women's K1 over 1km for merged O34/O44 classes, with three boats. Lovell took the win. Wilson capsized in the wind but self rescued by pulling herself onto her rear deck and paddling while sitting astride it, done so quickly and efficiently that she was already heading for the bank when Barkway came past, 1 min 17 seconds off the pace for the national title, before the arrival of the rescue boat.

By the time of the men's K1 200m in mid afternoon on Saturday, the wind had veered to being a crosswind and had increased in intensity so starts were becoming more difficult. The win went to Fletcher in 37.03, 2.62 seconds up on Gallacher, both of them Scottish Performance paddlers.

The final race on Saturday was the mixed K2 over 500m, won by Clark/Miles. Surprisingly, there were only two other pairs in the race, in contrast to the marathon national championships where the mixed doubles are now by far the most popular class.

Sunday was more sunny with the wind back to being a headwind which picked up again mid morning.
