a position he held until the finish, and Beers had slipped to 4th place, which he also retained throughout.

The wind had veered hard before Race 4 and the sun continued to smile for some of the time. Hampe was first off the line, as he was for at least three races, but had to retire with technical problems. It was Fenwick who took the win from Alistair Warren, Wood back in third place. This was Wood's poorest result, able to power away without the problem of weed that often plagues him on the sea.

The afternoon was to see two more races, recovering the programme somewhat. The Germans had brought across a couple of Typhoons, less extreme than International Canoes, and these joined in the racing, as did the son of Alistair Warren on an ILCA.
